PREFATORY NOTE

BY F. A. HYETT

THE work to which this is a Supplement was begun by Canon Bazeley and myself nearly thirty years ago. The first volume appeared in 1895 and the third in 1897. According to our original plan it was to have comprised not only topographical but biographical works and a large number of notes for this purpose were accumulated. As the work progressed, however, we found that it was attaining much larger proportions and had occupied much more time than we had expected, and in order that its completion might not be indefinitely postponed we determined to modify our scheme by abandoning the biographical section.

After volume 3 of our joint work had been printed, Canon Bazeley left in my custody our disused biographical notes, and I continued intermittently to add to them. About five years ago I found I had accumulated so much new matter that I set to work systematically to prepare for press a biographical supplement to the Manual. As many of the old notes collected before 1895 had been made by Canon Bazeley, I naturally desired that his name should appear on the title-page of the Supplement in conjunction with my own, but I failed to induce him to acquiesce in my wish, though he most willingly and generously gave me permission to make use of his work.

After I had finally decided to issue a biographical Supplement, Mr Roland Austin gave me assistance the value of which, both in its quantity and its quality, it would be difficult to over estimate. He did this from sheer love of the work and for some time refused to allow his name to appear as having collaborated in its production. I am glad that he did not persist in his refusal, for if the present volume possesses any merits they are quite as much due to him as they are to me.

PREFACE

THE alteration of the plan of volumes 1-3 while they were in progress has occasioned some defects in the present volume which we have done our best to diminish but could not altogether avoid. After the authors of volumes 1-3 had decided to abandon the issue of a biographical volume of the Manual, in order that some of the notes which would have been thereby discarded might be utilised, they embodied in these volumes such of those notes which bore a connection with the County on the face of them. For example, pedigrees of families or biographies of individuals described as of a particular place were entered among the histories of that place. The omission of these from the present volume or allusion to them by short references only would have destroyed its value unless the earlier volumes had been at hand. We have therefore repeated most of the biographical references in those volumes — many of them verbatim but some in a slightly abbreviated form with an indication of the pages of the original work where they may be found in full. We have however made an exception in the case of the Reports of Law Suits, &c., grouped under "Berkeley Peerage" at pp. 26-9 in vol. 2, the names of which it has not been thought necessary to repeat. Our aim has been to make the present volume useful as an independent work for all ordinary purposes of research.

The difficulties of determining the persons whose biographies should be included in a local bibliography are more numerous than those whose attention has not been directed to such subjects might suppose. What qualifications should a man possess to entitle him to be described as belonging to a particular place? Should birth within its boundaries be the only qualification for inclusion? To have answered this question in the affirmative might have been the simplest and at first sight the most correct solution, but it would have led to results which would often have been unsatisfactory and sometimes absurd. For instance, in the case of Gloucestershire, Mary Howitt, who was born at Coleford, where her parents, who had no sort of connection with the County, were temporarily residing, would have been included, as would also Cardinal Vaughan, who was born in Gloucester, but whose parents made their home in another county a few weeks after his birth, while Bishop Ellicott, who was Bishop of the Diocese for 42 years, Sir John Dorington, who was chairman successively of Quarter Sessions and of the County Council for 30 years, and T. Barwick Baker, who took a leading part in the administrative and philanthropic work of the County during the whole of a long life, would have been excluded. It seemed to us that men who had spent useful lives in the County — lives which sometimes formed a contribution to its history — had an irresistible claim to be described as "Gloucestershire Men," and that any system of selection which necessitated their exclusion must be rejected.

This decision gave rise to many questions which it was not easy to answer. If the holding of a local office was to qualify, what offices should give a qualification? and would mere appointment to one suffice, or should it be held for a given time? If residence in the County was to be by itself enough, what length of residence? It is obvious that no answers can be given to these questions which do not involve a system of selection which is more or less arbitrary. But some answers had to be found which would keep the size of this volume within reasonable limits and prevent its usefulness from being impaired by the inclusion of persons who were only remotely connected with the County.

After much consideration we decided that, as a general rule, no person should be regarded as coming within the scope of this work who did not fall within one or other of the following classes :—

1. Natives of Gloucestershire
   (a) without further qualification if their parents were connected with the County.
   (b) who had resided in the County for a few years if their parents had previously been unconnected with it.
2. Persons who had held some local office which necessitated or was accompanied by residence in the County for at least ten years.
   For example, Bishops, Incumbents, Nonconformist Ministers, Schoolmasters, are included, but not M. P.'s or Recorders unless they happened to be residents.
3. Persons who had resided in the County for at least twenty years.

These rules have not been very rigidly applied, indeed they have been used rather as guiding principles, and in their application extraneous considerations have been taken into account. For example, connection by office with the County which would have insured inclusion had it stood alone we have regarded as extinguished if followed by a closer or more generally accepted connection with some other county.

The following instances of omissions for this reason may be cited.

Accepted Frewen, who was Dean of Gloucester for 13 years, was Archbishop of York at his death. Joseph Butler, the author of the "Analogy," was Bishop of Bristol for 12 years, but he was translated to Durham and is now generally described as "Bishop of Durham." Joseph Wilcocks and Richard Beadon were Bishops of Gloucester, the one for 10 and the other for 11 years, and John Thornborough of Bristol for 13 years, but all of these subsequently held other Sees for much longer periods. Robert Hall, the eloquent Baptist Minister, officiated (with an interruption) for about 11 years at the Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, but his connection both with Cambridge and with Leicester was of much longer duration. Rowland Hill officiated for a part of every year for more than 50 years at a chapel at Wotton-under-Edge, but he did the same at Surrey Chapel in London, where he made his reputation, and with which his name is naturally associated. T. E. Brown's mastership at the Crypt School, Gloucester and at Clifton College extended over a period of 29 years, but to claim as a Gloucestershire man one who is always designated as "the Manx Poet" would be an anomaly.

On the other hand a few persons have been included whose tenure of office was less than 10 years if it was the last office which they held. This was the case with James Brooks, Bishop of Gloucester, and George Smalridge, and Robert Gray, Bishops of Bristol.

Sometimes the importance of the events which occurred during the tenure of a local office by a particular individual has been held to compensate for its want of the prescribed length or for some other defect of title. This was the case with John Hooper, who was Bishop of Gloucester for only four years, but, if any qualification other than birth is to obtain, no one would cavil at his inclusion. Sir Edward Massey's case is peculiar. He was Governor of the City of Gloucester for two years, but they were certainly the most eventful years of its history. No doubt this period, even under such special circumstances, would have been short to give any claim to be regarded as a Gloucestershire man, but as he subsequently represented the City of Gloucester in Parliament for ten years — whether with or without residence in the County is not known — we have admitted him.

It has generally been easy to obtain definite information as to the length of tenure of an office, but this has not been so with regard to place of birth or length of residence. There is a tradition that "Dick Whittington" belonged to a Gloucestershire family, but as no evidence is forthcoming as to his parentage, or the place of his birth, his name has been omitted. William Tyndale, on the other hand, unquestionably belonged to a Gloucestershire family, and his name has been included—although the belief that he was born in North Nibley has been shown to have been ill-founded, it is not impossible that he was born at Stinchcombe.

There was also another matter requiring settlement before the list of names could be completed, which had nothing to do with the connection of their bearers with the County. This was the nature and extent of the biographical notice which should give a title to admission.

Any memoir, however brief, if published as an independent work, has been considered sufficient, and all names of duly qualified persons who find a place in the Dictionary of National Biography have been included, although no other memoir of them exists.* In the case of other Dictionaries or Collective Biographies, the value and length of an article was taken into account before its subject was admitted. A single obituary notice in a periodical, unless of unusual length, has not been considered sufficient, but two or three of such notices have sometimes gained admission for those to whom they refer. In the application of this rule, families have been more liberally treated than individuals, and a large number admitted on the strength of a single reference to a printed genealogy.

The names of a few persons will be found, the only references to whom are funeral sermons. It is impossible to reconcile their admission with the rules that have been laid down, as few of such works contain a sentence which is strictly biographical. But copies of sermons of this class are as a rule excessively rare, and as their title-pages often record names which but for them would have passed into oblivion, it has been thought better to treat them in an entirely exceptional manner.

The foregoing explanations, coupled with the instances of admissions and exclusions which have been given, will it is hoped indicate the system (or perhaps some may think want of system) on which the names in this volume have been selected. The title to inclusion (for what it may be worth) is stated immediately after the name of every person of whom biographical notices are recorded, indeed with the addition of the date of birth this is the only information that the head-notes are generally intended to supply. In the case of distinguished persons, however, a few important events in their careers have been mentioned, and in other cases biographical details have been added where without them the reason for the inclusion of works under a particular name would be obscure.

The Catalogues of the British Museum and the Bodleian and other leading Libraries, both in London and the provinces, as well as those of a few private collectors, have been searched for literature bearing on our subject. The references to articles in periodicals are more numerous than are usually to be found in bibliographies. Many of these have been obtained by a first-hand search, but their number has been augmented by the aid of the Dictionary of National Biography, and that monument of American industry, Poole's Index of Periodical Literature.

References from either of these sources have, however, been verified and amplified, except in the case of a few American Magazines, which are not in the British Museum. We may add that a considerable number of references to articles of no little value in the Gentleman's Magazine and Notes and Queries will be found, which had escaped the notice of the contributors to the Dictionary of National Biography.

With a few exceptions no bibliography of the works of authors whose biographies are mentioned has been attempted, but whenever a list of their works exists, either in the Dictionary of National Biography or elsewhere, attention has been called to it. Sometimes these lists have been supplemented by the addition of omitted works. The most important exception to this rule is in the case of Bishop Ellicott, an exhaustive bibliography of whose works is given because none is to be found elsewhere and the mention of them in the Dictionary of National Biography is unusually meagre.

Seventeenth century works by Gloucestershire authors have been generally collated, and such of them as are prized by collectors (e.g. Dennys' "Secret of Angling" and Northbrooke's "Spiritus est Vicarius Christi") have been very fully described. Reviews of works of any date by such authors are generally noticed. The list of reviews of Southey's works is, as might be expected, a very long one.

The domicile of the copies of works examined which are not readily accessible are indicated by initials. All biographical works described have been seen except where the contrary is mentioned.

For permission to reproduce or for aid in obtaining reproductions of portraits, &c. for the L.P. copies of this work, our thanks are due to the Dean of Christ Church, the Master of Pemb. Coll. Lloyd-Baker, Sir Hubert Parry, Earl St Aldwyn, The Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, The Trustees of the British Museum, The Superintendent of the Hope Collection of Prints, Messrs Smith, Elder & Co., Messrs Emery Walker & Co., and Messrs Elliott & Fry.

INTRODUCTION

TOPOGRAPHICAL bibliographies do not as a rule appeal to a large class of the reading public. Librarians and book collectors recognize their uses, as do, to a lesser extent, students of local history. But when such a work contains a biographical section it commands a wider interest, for it then cannot but include numerous references to the lives and work of men who have attained fame or notoriety outside the area to which it relates. Indeed the biographical portion of a county bibliography forms a rough and ready index to the part which that county has played on the stage of national history or in the world of literature.

Those who take even a cursory glance through the following pages will find the names of many noteworthy citizens, and of a few who have admittedly in their respective spheres reached the very topmost pinnacle of fame. Obviously no county can claim sons who have in every walk of life attained transcendent eminence. So among our Gloucestershire worthies it will be seen that there are soldiers and sailors, poets and statesmen who stand high in public estimation, but there are none who can be ranked with Wellington or Marlborough, with Nelson or Hawkins, with Shakespeare or Milton, with Chatham or Pitt. On the other hand, to George Whitefield, the son of a Gloucester innkeeper, is usually assigned the very first place among preachers, and Sir Matthew Hale and Lord Hardwicke (the one connected by birth and the other by office and residence with our County) hold prominent positions even among the very greatest judges who have ever adorned the English Bench.

It may be of interest if the contributions of Gloucestershire to the stream of national life—the "men of thought and men of action"—born in or closely connected with the County are examined under their respective vocations.

In the legal world Gloucestershire is strongly represented. The names of

Two Lord Chancellors of England
Two Lord Chancellors of Ireland
Three Lord Chief Justices of the King's Bench
Two Lord Chief Barons of the Exchequer
One Lord Justice of Appeal
One Master of the Rolls, and One Dean of the Arches and other judges of lower rank, are mentioned in the following pages. The Lord Chancellors of England were the second Lord Bathurst and the first Lord Hardwicke. The claim of the latter to be a Gloucestershire man rests on his close connection with the County for 38 years. He was unquestionably one of our greatest judges. "It is hardly too much to say that in the course of somewhat less than twenty years he transformed equity from a chaos of precedents to a scientific system . . . His judgments, which were usually written, were models of logical arrangement and perspicuous style, and" continues Mr J. M. Rigg, "though he amassed an immense fortune, no suspicion of corruption ever sullied his fair fame." The two Irish Lord Chancellors, Richard Freeman and John Freeman-Mitford, 1st Lord Redesdale, both owned Batsford. Freeman was born there, and it was from a descendant of his that Lord Redesdale acquired the Batsford property and his first surname. The Lord Chief Justices of the King's Bench, Sir John Fortescue, Sir Matthew Hale and Sir Edward Saunders, were, it goes without saying, all men of mark, for, as the late Lord Coleridge observed, "a man does not drift into being Lord Chief Justice of England."

Sir John Fortescue, who was appointed Lord Chief Justice in 1442, was Lord of the Manor of Ebrington, where he spent the last years of his life. He was the writer of many legal treatises, some of which have still an historical value. The most celebrated of these is De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, but his tract on The Governance of England (an excellent edition of which was brought out in 1885) will now be found of greater interest. His professional career ended with the fall of the House of Lancaster, of which he had always been a staunch supporter. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Tewkesbury and, recognising that the cause for which he had struggled was lost, he acknowledged King Edward and received pardon. He was buried in Ebrington Church. Lord Campbell speaks of him as "one of the most learned and upright men who ever sat in the Court of Queen's Bench," and considers that "he laid the foundation of Parliamentary privilege to which our liberties are to be mainly ascribed." He was appointed Lord Chancellor by Henry VI., but whether the appointment was valid is very doubtful. He never had possession of the great seal.

Sir Matthew Hale was unequivocally a Gloucestershire man. He was born at Alderley, where his father owned an estate to which he succeeded, and his mother was a member of the Poyntz Family, who also belonged to the County. He was appointed Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1660, and eleven years later he was promoted to the Chief Justiceship of the King's Bench, which, during his presidency, from the regularity and solemnity of its proceedings was described as "an Academy of Sciences." He was distinguished as much for his integrity, piety, and high sense of honour as for his enormous industry and profound learning. His opinion on all legal matters came to be regarded as almost infallible.

Sir Edward Saunders was also a remarkable man. His father was a small tradesman in Barnwood, where Edward was born. He went to London when quite young, where he taught himself to write, and managed to subsist by copying legal documents. He applied himself with diligence to the study of law and was called to the Bar by the Benchers of the Middle Temple in 1660. He commenced his professional career as a reporter, and did his work so well that Lord Mansfield described him as the Terence of Reporters. His reports went through seven editions between 1686 and 1791. He soon obtained a large practice, and he was appointed Lord Chief Justice when he was about 50 years old. He "never in all his life betrayed a client," but his private life was somewhat irregular, in consequence of which he was not a favourite with Sir Matthew Hale.

The two Lord Chief Barons were Sir Robert Atkyns and Sir Edmund Probyn. Sir Robert Atkyns, who was born in Gloucestershire, came of a family of successful lawyers. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather had all been judges, and it is said that for two hundred years his ancestors had held judicial appointments. His younger brother, Sir Edward Atkyns, immediately preceded him as Lord Chief Baron. The estimation in which he was held by his contemporaries as an able and upright judge was second only to that of Sir Matthew Hale. He was father of Sir Robert Atkyns, the author of "The Ancient and Present State of Glostershire."

Sir Edmund Probyn was a son of William Probyn of Newland, in the Forest of Dean, where he was born.

The Master of the Rolls connected with Gloucestershire was Henry Powle, who lived at Williamstrip and was buried at Quenington, and who was three times returned as M.P. for Cirencester.

The Lord Justice of Appeal was Sir John Rolt of Ozleworth Park, near Wotton-under-Edge, and the Dean of the Arches was Sir Herbert Jenner-Fust, of Hill Court, near Berkeley.

Sir John Powell, who was successively Baron of the Exchequer and Justice of the Common Pleas and King's Bench, was an eminent judge. He was a native of Gloucester and was Town Clerk of the City in 1674, and represented it in Parliament in 1685. Sir Robert Tracy, who was born at Toddington and passed the last years of his life at Coscomb, in Gloucestershire, was also a Baron of the Exchequer and Justice of the Common Pleas.

Many distinguished judges have been Recorders of Bristol, but only one, Sir Robert Atkyns, comes within the scope of this work.

The names of two Speakers of the House of Commons occur. Sir Henry Powle (who has been already mentioned as a Master of the Rolls) was Speaker of the Convention Parliament, and the first Lord Redesdale (also previously referred to) held the office for one year (1801-2).

The County has supplied Parliament with several members who may be described as prominent politicians, but with few who can fairly be ranked as statesmen. No Gloucestershire man has ever been Prime Minister, and only one, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, first Earl St. Aldwyn, has ever been Chancellor of the Exchequer. John Cam Hobhouse, first Lord Broughton, who came of a Bristol family, and T. H. S. Sotheron Estcourt, of Estcourt, were both Cabinet Ministers.

In the management of County affairs Gloucestershire has always had a high reputation. More than a century ago it was "distinguished for the efficiency with which its county business was carried on" by the Court of Quarter Sessions, and when local government in some parts of England was the source of many abuses, Gloucestershire was one of the few "highly organised and progressive" counties.* Sir G. O. Paul, T. Barwick Baker, T. Gambier Parry, J. Curtis Hayward, S. S. Dickinson, Sir J. E. Dorington, and Russell J. Kerr, whose names occur in these pages, were conspicuous for their services to the County. But these names do not by any means exhaust the roll of able administrators of whom the County may be proud, and it is a matter of regret that the absence of biographical notices precludes the inclusion in this work of such men as the Rev. John Foley and R. B. Purnell.

The roll of famous Gloucestershire soldiers and sailors, it must be admitted, is somewhat meagre. The Somerset family have given us two of our most distinguished generals, who were both sons of the 5th Duke of Beaufort. The elder, Lord Edward Somerset, earned distinction in the Peninsular War and also at Waterloo, where he commanded the Household Brigade. His memory is kept alive amongst us by the tower which overlooks the Vale of Severn from the crest of Hawkesbury Hill. The younger, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, afterwards Lord Raglan, was on Wellington's staff during the Peninsular War and was awarded a cross with five clasps for his services. At Waterloo he received a bullet wound in his right arm which occasioned its amputation. He bore the operation without a word, and when it was over called out to his servant "Hullo, don't carry away that arm till I've taken off my ring." He was implicitly trusted by the Duke of Wellington, who had a great affection for him. When the Crimean War broke out in 1854 he was selected for the command of the British troops. Success attended the operations of the allied forces for some months, and in Nov., 1854 Raglan was made Field-Marshal. But in the winter of that year our troops suffered great privation and hardships during the ill-advised siege of Sebastopol (for which the War Office and not Raglan was responsible), and these were in the main unfairly attributed to Raglan. An assault on Sebastopol, undertaken at the instance of the French general and against Raglan's better judgment, on June 18, 1855, ended in disaster. He felt these failures keenly and they diminished his strength, which had already been undermined by dysentery. He died on June 28, 1855, as was said by Sir Evelyn Wood "the victim (or should we not say one of the many victims) of England's unreadiness for war." Although his capacity as a general has been reflected on, he retained the confidence of the army to the day of his death, probably a sufficient answer to civilian criticism. His personal gallantry was conspicuous, his staff thought that he would rather be under fire than not. The nobility of his character earned for him universal respect. The Duke of Wellington said of him that he would not tell a lie to save his life. Take him for all in all he may be regarded as one of Gloucestershire's most distinguished sons.

One of the most brilliant commanders connected with the County was Sir Edward Massey, whose successful defence of Gloucester (of which he was Governor) when besieged by Charles I. was a very remarkable performance. No less remarkable, when at the head of troops, were the rapidity of his marches and the suddenness of his attacks. Probably no such dashing leader ever met with so few reverses. After the Restoration he represented Gloucester in Parliament during the later years of his life.

Hodson of "Hodson's Horse," who was a native of Maisemore, is another soldier of whom Gloucestershire may be proud. No man in the British army who occupied a comparatively subordinate place did more for the suppression of the Indian Mutiny than Hodson. The coolness and daring he displayed in the capture of the King of Delhi and his two sons amazed even those who knew him, and spread terror through the ranks of the mutineers. Sir Hugh Gough said of him that "a finer or more gallant soldier never breathed. He had the true instincts of a leader of men."

Of the lesser stars in the military firmament mention should be made of Sir John Winter, of Major-General Sir Henry Gee Roberts, and of Sir Daniel Lysons. Winter, who lived at the White House, Lydney, was private secretary to Queen Henrietta Maria. He was a civilian by profession, but forced to play the part of a soldier when the Civil War broke out, and he acquitted himself well. He was the only royalist leader who could cope with Massey with any chance of success when the Gloucester garrison was raiding the Forest of Dean. Major-General Roberts, like Hodson, distinguished himself during the suppression of the Indian Mutiny. General Sir Daniel Lysons, son of Daniel Lysons the topographer, of Rodmarton and Hempsted, was an all-round good soldier. He saw active service in Canada and in the Crimea, where he was severely wounded and where he was noted for the care of his men. He was three times mentioned in despatches in 1854-5.

The names of thirteen Admirals will be noticed, three of whom were members of the Berkeley family, viz. : James, 3rd Earl of Berkeley, George Cranfield Berkeley, son of the 4th Earl of Berkeley, and Sir Maurice Berkeley, 1st Baron Fitzhardinge; and two of the Codrington family, viz. : Sir Edward Codrington, and his son, Sir Henry Codrington. Of these the most famous is Sir Edward Codrington, who commanded the British fleet at the Battle of Navarino. His son, Sir Henry, saw no active service after he became a flag officer, but he had given evidence of the possession of qualities, which, had he lived in more troubled times, might "have sent his name down to posterity among those of our most distinguished admirals." Among the other Gloucestershire admirals of whom mention is made are Sir Alexander Ball, Sir Edward Sotheby, and F. A. Close. Ball was born at Ebworth Park in the parish of Painswick, in 1757. Nelson, who had a great regard for him, had a high opinion of his professional capacity. His reputation however rests rather upon his just and enlightened government of Malta after its annexation by Great Britain than upon his services as a naval commander. Sotheby was born in Clifton, and Close in Cheltenham, when his father, Francis Close, Dean of Carlisle, was rector of the parish.

We now come to a section which numerically and ethically holds the highest rank. If the men and women whose names occur in this volume in alphabetical order were re-arranged after the method of a catalogue raisonné it would at once give rise to the thought that there may be a truth in the quaint old proverb "As sure as God's in Gloucestershire" other than that of its origin, for it becomes evident that it is in the world of religious thought that the County has displayed greatest activity and laboured with most effect. The number of names in this class far exceeds that in any other. It comprises Translators of the Bible, Preachers, Theologians, Church Dignitaries, and representatives of every leading Nonconformist sect, the names of some of whom are still held in honour throughout the English-speaking world.

The most illustrious member of this important group is unquestionably William Tyndale, who stands at the head of our Reformation leaders. His share in the historic controversy with Sir Thomas More did more to curb the influence of sacerdotalism among the educated than the writings of any other Englishman, and, what was of far greater importance, his translation of the New, and parts of the Old Testament into English fostered throughout the country a spirit which made for freedom. His love of truth and his great learning (he was reputed to be the best Greek scholar in Europe of his day), coupled with the force and simplicity of his English, pre-eminently fitted him for the task which he had undertaken. The excellence of his translation may be gathered from the fact that when the text of the English version of the Bible was revised by a Committee of divines in the reign of James I., many of his renderings were substantially retained by the revisionists, who to a great extent adopted his methods and his style.

Miles Smith, a great classic and Hebrew scholar, who afterwards became Bishop of Gloucester, was a prominent member of this Committee. He took part in the revision of the prophetic books (which of them were allotted to him is not known) and he and Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, were apppointed to make a final revision of the whole of the Old Testament. It may therefore be fairly assumed that the force and exquisite beauty of some of its passages were due to his taste and scholarship.* And as John Bell, who was

* It has been pointed out to one of the authors that in "Gloucester in National History" (p. 247), the translation of the Book of Isaiah is attributed to Miles Smith. The passage certainly may bear that construction, though it was not intended to do so. There is no documentary evidence for such attribution.—F.A.H.

Rector of Weston-sub-Edge and Archdeacon of Gloucester, revised the Epistle to the Thessalonians in 1543, our County can claim the honour of a connection with three eminent Biblical translators.

The earliest and one of the most famous of our Gloucestershire theologians was Alexander of Hales, known as the "Doctor Irrefragabilis," who after lecturing in Paris on theology and metaphysics entered the Order of the Franciscans, and imparted to them an educational character they did not before possess; indeed through his ability the Franciscan friars became formidable opponents of the secular professors in the Paris University. He was one of the first of the schoolmen who expended untold labour on the futile task of attempting to reconcile the teaching of Christ with the teaching of Aristotle. He died in 1245.

Another scholastic philosopher, who flourished a century later and may be claimed as a Gloucestershire man, is John of Dumbleton, of which village it may be assumed he was a native.

George Kedermyster, Abbot of Winchcombe, was a theologian of some repute who vigorously upheld the Benefit of the Clergy. His abbey flourished under his rule "so much so that it was equal to a little University." He was one of the representatives of this country at the Lateran Council in 1512.

Robert Crowley (or as his name is also written, Crole or Croleus) was born in Gloucestershire about 1518. He was a prolific author, and most of his life was spent in upholding the doctrines of the Reformation. He was also a printer, and the impressions of the "Vision of Pierce Plowman" which issued from his press, have done more to perpetuate his memory than his controversial works.

Three curious works, the title of each of which commences with the words "Spiritus est Vicarius Christi in Terra" were written by John Northbrooke, a Bristol preacher.

The last of these, first printed in 1579, was the earliest systematic attack on stage plays. It has been reprinted by the Shakespeare Society.

Of succeeding local divines, Richard Field, Dean of Gloucester, attained a greater reputation than the rest. His chief work entitled "Of the Church, Five Books," first published in 1606, is placed by some critics on a par with Hooker's "Laws of Ecclesiasticall Politie."

Another theologian of some repute in his day was Sebastian Benefield, who was born at Prestbury, in 1559, and was vicar of Maisey Hampton from 1614 till his death in 1630. He was appointed Margaret Professor of Theology at Oxford in 1613. Richard Capel, an eminent puritan divine, was born and educated in Gloucester. His work entitled "Tentations" went through many editions. Rather than read James I.'s Book of Sports he resigned the living of Eastington, and settled in Pitchcombe, where he died in 1656. John Trapp, whose commentaries on the Bible were characterised by learning and humour, was incumbent of Welford-on-Avon and Weston-on-Avon, two Gloucestershire livings, between 1636 and 1660. John Fox, who after being ejected from the vicarage of Pucklechurch, took charge of a Nonconformist congregation at Nailsworth, wrote "Time and the End of Time" (1670), and "The Door of Heaven Opened and Shut" (1676), two works of some merit.

The theological writings of George Bull were read and admired beyond the shores of Great Britain. He was appointed Bishop of St. David's in 1705, before which he had been incumbent of Bristol and Gloucestershire livings for 51 years. His chief works are "Harmonica Apostolica" and "Defensio Fidei Nicænæ," the latter of which was praised by Bossuet. George Vernon, who was rector of Bourton-on-the-Water for about 50 years, wrote a defence of the Established Church entitled "Ataxiæ Obstaculum," to which Sir Thomas Overbury, the younger, replied with "Ratiocinium Vernaculum." The "Ataxiæ" was occasioned by "Queries proposed to the serious Consideration of those who impose upon others in Things of Divine and Supernatural Revelation, and persecute any upon the account of Religion"—an anonymous tract which is said to have been written by Overbury.

Thomas Hyde, who was Archdeacon of Gloucester (1678-1702), held professorships of Hebrew and Arabic at Oxford, and was said by Hearne to have been in his day the greatest orientalist in Europe.

Joseph White, born near Ruscombe, in the neighbourhood of Stroud, in 1745, was another theologian who was also a distinguished orientalist. He obtained an unenviable notoriety in connection with his Bampton Lectures, which enhanced his reputation, but in the preparation of which, it subsequently transpired, he had received much unacknowledged and unrequited assistance.

An original but inconclusive work: "The Divine Legation of Moses," which provoked considerable controversy in the 18th century, was written by William Warburton, who was for 20 years Bishop of Gloucester. Josiah Tucker, Dean of Gloucester (1758-99), may perhaps be classed among theologians, but he earned a greater reputation as a writer on political economy, and is said to have forestalled some of Adam Smith's theories.

Another theologian who was also eminent as an orientalist was Robert Payne Smith, Dean of Canterbury. He was born in 1819 at Chipping Campden, where his ancestors had been settled for generations, probably since the days of Edward III. He commenced his education at Campden Grammar School, where he obtained the scholarship attached to Pembroke College, Oxford. He catalogued the Syriac MSS. in the Bodleian Library, and when this was completed he commenced the Thesaurus Syriacus, which occupied much of his leisure for 36 years of his life. He was Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford from 1865 to 1870, and Dean of Canterbury from the latter date till his death in 1895.

Among our local preachers, George Whitefield, son of a Gloucester Innkeeper, stands facile princeps. He was one of the two great leaders of the Methodist movement in the 18th Century, and although John Wesley had the larger share in shaping and directing that movement, the rapidity with which it spread was due more to Whitefield's impassioned eloquence than to any other cause. In the power of kindling religious fervour in the hearts of a vast congregation he was nearly Savonarola's equal.

A name almost forgotten is that of William Cartwright, who was born at Northway, near Tewkesbury, in 1611, and who, although he died at the early age of 32, was said by Anthony Wood to have been "the most florid and seraphical preacher in the University of Oxford."

Many natives of the County have held high offices in the Church :—

JOHN MOORE, Archbishop of Canterbury (1783-1805)
TOBIAS MATTHEW, Archbishop of York (1606-28)
FRANCIS MARSH, Archbishop of Dublin (1682-93)
JOSIAH HORT, Archbishop of Tuam (1742-51)
PHILIP BISSE, Bishop of Hereford (1713-21)
JOHN CARPENTER, Bishop of Worcester (1444-76)
JOHN CHEDWORTH, Bishop of Lincoln (1451-71)
EDWARD FOX, Bishop of Hereford (1535-8)
ROBERT HUNTINGTON, Bishop of Raphoe (July-Sept., 1701), and
WM. BASIL JONES, Bishop of St. Davids (1874-97)
EDMUND LACY, Bishop of Exeter (1420-55)
THOMAS RUTHALL, Bishop of Durham (1509-23)

were all born in Gloucestershire, and

RALPH OF BRISTOL, Bishop of Kildare (1223-32), and WILLIAM THOMAS, Bishop of Worcester (1683-89)

were born in Bristol.

Bishop Fox was probably the most distinguished of those whose names are on this list. When quite a young man his ability was recognised by Wolsey, who entrusted to him the negotiations with Rome and other foreign courts relating to the divorce of Catherine of Aragon. He was also sent on other missions where difficult and delicate questions were involved. Bishop Huntington was a great orientalist, and he assisted in the translation of the Old Testament into Irish.

Henry Dean, who was Archbishop of Canterbury, 1501-3, probably belonged to the Dene Family of the Forest of Dean, but proof is wanting. He was certainly connected with the County by office, for he was Prior of Llanthony Secunda, near Gloucester, from 1461 to 1494.

Some of the ecclesiastics connected by office with Gloucestershire and Bristol have been distinguished men. One of these was Gilbert Foliot, who was Abbot of St. Peter's Abbey at Gloucester before he became successively Bishop of Hereford and London, He was Becket's most formidable antagonist, and probably for that reason he became the trusted adviser of Henry II. He is said to have been remarkable for his piety, his learning, and his eloquence.

Of all churchmen whose connection with the County was official, Bishop Hooper unquestionably figures more prominently in history than any other. The leading part which he took in the national struggle for religious freedom and the splendid courage with which he met an agonizing death, the torments of which were cruelly prolonged, have perpetuated his memory throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Of ecclesiastics of lesser note who were connected by office with Gloucestershire or Bristol, the following may be mentioned. Anthony Ellys, Bishop of St. Davids, was a Canon of Gloucester for 37 years (1724-1761). Thomas Newton, who was Bishop of Bristol from 1761 till his death in 1782, owes his reputation to his edition of "Paradise Lost," which went through eight editions, and to his "Dissertation on the Prophecies," an eighteenth edition of which was issued in 1834. The latter, Johnson said, was "Tom's greatest work: but how far it was great and how much of it was Tom's, was another question." Samuel Hallifax, James Henry Monk, and Charles John Ellicott, all Bishops of Gloucester, were distinguished scholars. William Lort Mansel, who was educated at the Grammar School, Gloucester, became Master of Trinity College and Public Orator at Cambridge before he was appointed Bishop of Bristol in 1808. He was a celebrated wit, and the poet Rogers described his epigrams as "remarkably neat and clever."

Bristol has been for centuries an important centre of Nonconformity, and Ministers of Broadmead and Lewin's Mead Chapels, have not unfrequently been men of no ordinary ability. One of these was John Ryland, President of the Bristol Baptist College, who was the immediate predecessor, at Broadmead Chapel, of the famous preacher Robert Hall, a man whose name would also have been found in the following pages, but for his closer connection with other places. John Prior Estlin and Lant Carpenter were two distinguished Unitarians who ministered at Lewin's Mead Chapel. Both were also schoolmasters, and both were loved and revered by their pupils. Estlin numbered Coleridge, Southey and Robert Hall among his friends.

John Biddle, who was born at Wotton-under-Edge in 1615, and became Master of the Crypt School, Gloucester, in 1641, was a very learned man, who suffered persecution on account of his anti-trinitarian writings. He was sentenced to many terms of imprisonment, he was banished to the Scilly Isles, he was reduced to destitution, and he died from a disease brought on by foul prison air.

Two other Nonconformist Ministers who were punished for their opinions were James Forbes and William Winterbotham. Two of Winterbotham's descendants represented Gloucestershire Constituencies in Parliament, and another of them was a County Alderman for 25 years. He was sentenced to two long terms of imprisonment for sermons in which lawyers smelt sedition. During the last 21 years of his life he had charge of a congregation at Horsley. James Forbes was imprisoned in Chepstow Castle on a charge which seems to have been fabricated. With some interruptions he ministered for 58 years in Gloucester. He was a weekly preacher in the Cathedral from 1654 to the Restoration, when (being one of "Oliver's Preachers") he was prohibited from preaching in the diocese. He was in Gloucester in 1672, and was pastor of a Nonconformist congregation there from 1686 till his death in 1712. The Barton Street Chapel, of which he was the first Minister, was built in 1699.

John Roberts, a Quaker, who was born at Siddington, was a sturdy upholder of the faith that was in him. Like Biddle and Winterbotham, he underwent imprisonment for conscience sake. His fame is perhaps to some extent due to the graphic style in which his memoirs were written by his son Daniel—a little book which has gone through about 40 editions—but apart from this, the humour, good sense and good temper, which Roberts displayed under persecution, would have given his "Memoirs" a permanent interest.

Edward Tagart, a Unitarian writer of considerable ability, was born in Bristol in 1804. Hallam thought that one of his works would restore Locke to his proper position in the estimation of the country.

The names of many other workers in the same field who have been esteemed for their learning or piety will be found in the following pages.

Some of the theologians previously mentioned were, as has been stated, remarkable for their scholarship. Besides these, other distinguished scholars have been connected with the County. Thomas Neal, Professor of Hebrew at Oxford (1559-1569), was born at Yate, and Brian Houghton Hodgson's mastery of Sanskrit and Tibetan enabled him to throw much light on the religion and literature of the Buddhists, which for Europe he may be said to have discovered. After leaving India he spent the last 36 years of his life successively at Dursley and Alderly.

Arthur Cooke Burnell, another great Sanskrit scholar, was born at St. Briavels. His "Classified Index to the Sanskrit MSS. in the Palace at Tanjore" was a work which no other scholar could have so successfully accomplished, and his "Handbook of South Indian Palæography" was said by Professor Max Müller to have opened "an avenue through one of the darkest jungles of Indian archæology, and is so full of documentary evidence that it will long remain indispensable to every student of Indian literature."

Robert Meadows White, before accepting the living of Slimbridge which he held for nineteen years, had been Professor of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford.

Three distinguished mathematicians, Isaac Dalby, Bartholomew Price, and Norman Macleod Ferrers were natives of Gloucestershire, and a fourth, Henry Moseley, was Vicar of Olveston from 1854 to 1872.

Nine heads of Colleges at Oxford or Cambridge, whose names are subsequently referred to, were born in Gloucestershire or Bristol. Arthur Charlett, Master of Univ. Coll., Ox. (1692-1722), was born at Shipton, near Cheltenham; John Chedworth, Provost of King's Coll., Camb., was a native of Gloucestershire; Norman Ferrers, Master of Gonville and Caius Coll., Camb., at Prinknash; John Fuller, Master of Jesus Coll., Camb. (1557-8), at Gloucester; Robert Harris, President of Trinity Coll., Ox. (1648-58), at Broad Campden; Edmund Lacy, Master of Univ. Coll., Ox. (1398-1403), probably in Gloucestershire; Robert Morwent, President of Corp. Ch. Coll., Ox., at Hartpury; Bartholomew Price, of Pemb. Coll., Ox. (1891-98), at Coln St Dennis; and Thomas Turner, President of Corp. Ch. Coll., Ox. (1688-1714), at Bristol.

John Hall, Bishop of Bristol, was Master of Pembroke

Coll., Ox., 1664-1710, and Leonard Hoar, who was President of Harvard College, America (1672-5), was also a native of Gloucestershire.

One of the direct results of the religious revival of the 17th Century was a stimulus to philanthropy, and so, as might be expected, in Gloucestershire, where revivalists were active, philanthropists were numerous. At the head of this list must be placed Robert Raikes, to whom the nation owes the Sunday School system, and Sir G. O. Paul, who was second only to Howard as a Prison Reformer, and in actual practical work, perhaps, surpassed him. Among others who laboured in this field, and of whom Gloucestershire may be proud, were William Fox, of Clapton, who developed Raikes's scheme ; Mary Carpenter, the friend of juvenile delinquents ; Joseph Sturge, one of the champions of the anti-slavery movement ; T. Barwick Baker, the founder of the first state-aided Reformatory ; William Canynges, Edward Colston and Samuel Warneford, who munificently endowed Schools, Hospitals, or other Charitable Institutions ; and Vincent Stucky Lean, who left £50,000 to the British Museum, and a like sum to Bristol Libraries. One of the earliest and most noteworthy of our local philanthropists was John Bellers, of Coln St. Aldwyn, whose proposals for the prevention of destitution by an alteration of our economic conditions, find a place in the theories of modern social reformers.

The work of George Müller as a philanthropist, having regard to its extent and the means by which it was achieved, was quite unique. He built at a cost of £115,000, and maintained at an annual cost of £26,000 an Orphanage on Ashley Down, Clifton, without any direct appeal for subscriptions, but by circulating throughout many parts of the world a brief account of his past life, entitled "A Narrative of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller." During his life he received for this object no less than £1,500,000 and he maintained 123,000 children. The widespread interest which his work aroused is evidenced by the number of magazine articles and other literature which it occasioned, references to which will be found under his name.

Chatterton and Southey stand at the head of our local poets, both, be it observed, natives of Bristol,* whence a large proportion of the celebrities mentioned in this work have sprung. It is a strange chance which here couples their names together, for it would be difficult to find two poets who differed more widely, as much in the circumstances of their lives as in the characteristics and fortunes of their works. Chatterton's tragic fate is known to everyone. Failing to earn a livelihood by his pen and finding himself face to face with starvation, being too proud to beg, he put an end to his life when only 18 years old. Southey lived to nearly four times that age, his voluminous writings, which were widely read, brought him in a fair fortune, and during the last 30 years of his life he was Poet Laureate. But Time has a habit of adjusting the mistakes of contemporaries. Southey's poems, except by those who make a special study of English literature, are scarcely read, while new editions of Chatterton's works, and new accounts of his life, continue to issue from the press.

There were of course poets of an earlier date connected with the County. William Cartwright, who was born at Northway, near Tewkesbury, was a dramatist of some repute in the days of James I., and the works of John Oldham, a native of Shipton Moyne, who in the style of his satire, though not in the refinement of his taste, may be regarded as a precursor of Pope, went through numerous editions between 1683 and 1770. Ulpian Fulwell, rector of Naunton 1570-85, and Thomas Washbourne, rector of Dumbleton, 1640 to 1687, author of "Divine Poems," first published in 1654, are perhaps both deserving of mention, though their works have not very materially added to the stock of English poetry.

* A large part of the City of Bristol lies within the geographical boundaries of Gloucestershire, and a considerable portion of the present City was, till quite recently, within its administrative boundaries.

"The Secrets of Angling" (the first metrical treatise on fishing in the language) by John Dennys, of Bitton, is a poem of some slight merit, and has an adventitious interest (at least for bibliophiles) on account of the extreme rarity of its early editions, and the uncertainty which so long prevailed as to its authorship. Joseph Trapp, the first Professor of Poetry at Oxford, was born at Cherrington in Gloucestershire. He was the writer of many verses, but is now only remembered by his translation of Virgil. Among poets of later days we are able to claim William Ernest Henley, a native of Gloucester, who was also an eminent critic, and (through a residence of 38 years in the County) Sydney Dobell, the author of "The Roman" and "Balder." Thomas Lovell Beddoes, a native of Clifton, whose posthumous work "Death's Jest Book," has found a permanent place in literature, and John Addington Symonds, the translator of Michael Angelo's Sonnets, were natives of Clifton. John Keble, who was born at Fairford, and descended from an old Gloucestershire family, and Charles Wesley, who was born at Bristol, where he lived during many years of his life, alone suffice to place our County, as the home of hymn-writers, in quite the front rank. Isaac Williams, the author of Lyra Apostolica, was curate of Sherborne, Gloucestershire. To the Singers of the Church must be added the names of John Ryland, Baptist Minister, of Bristol, some of whose hymns are still in constant use, and of old Benjamin Beddome, who was Baptist Minister at Bourton-on-the-Water from 1740 to 1795. A volume containing no less than 830 of his hymns was published in 1818.

The County has also produced some of those whom Southey designates as "uneducated poets." Chief among these is John Taylor, generally known as "the water-poet," who was born in Gloucester in 1580. He was for many years a waterman on the Thames, and when his earnings were diminished by the increase of coaches (which he calls 'hired hackney-hell carts'), he took to writing verses as a means of increasing his income. As literature they are poor stuff, and the writer of his life in the Dictionary of National Biography says that he should be regarded as a literary bargee rather than, as he styled himself, "the King's Water Poet." His works have, however, from the minuteness of their descriptions, an antiquarian and historical value. He had a facility for versifying, and the same writer gives a list of no less than 157 rhymed brochures, which are attributed to him. Many of them are journals of trips which he made in his boat on English rivers, and the titles of such as are biographical are given in extenso in the following pages. To the same class belong John Jones, a domestic servant, and Ann Yearsley, "the Bristol Milkwoman."

As is probably the case in most counties, the list of prose writers is a long one. It commences, in point of time, with three of the old chroniclers, Robert of Gloucester, Richard of Cirencester, and William of Worcester, who was born in Bristol. John of Trevisa, who was an accomplished translator of Latin into English in the 14th Century, was vicar of Berkeley, and canon of Westbury-on-Trym, and Fabian Phillips, royalist controversialist, was born at Prestbury, near Cheltenham. The most eminent names on the list are those of Robert Southey, John Foster, the essayist, Hannah More, and John Addington Symonds. A much higher place is now accorded to Southey as a prose writer than as a poet. As a biographer he has not often been excelled. Some idea of the interest which his prose works and poems excited in his own day may be formed by observing the numerous references to Reviews collected under his name. Among those of lesser note are a goodly group of topographical and antiquarian writers, viz.: Daniel and Samuel Lysons, Sir Robert Atkyns, Philip Bliss (the editor of Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses), George Ormerod (author of the History of Cheshire), John Lewis, Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, Henry Thomas Ellacombe, James Dallaway, William Barrett, Herbert Haines (the author of an excellent "Manual of Monumental Brasses,") Samuel Rudder and Sir John Maclean. "The Spiritual Quixote" will keep alive the name of Richard Graves, of Mickleton. John Scandrett Harford, of Bristol, wrote an admirable life of Michael Angelo.

Robert Raikes, senr., and Robert Raikes, junr. (who has been already named among philanthropists), proprietors and editors of the Gloucester Journal (which was founded by the former in 1722 and is still flourishing), gave to the County a newspaper which has always occupied a high position among provincial journals. John Mathew Gutch owned and edited from 1833 to 1844 Felix Farley's Bristol Journal, which was merged in the Bristol Times in 1853. Philip Harwood earned for himself considerable distinction. He was born in Bristol, and after sub-editing the Examiner, the Spectator, the Morning Chronicle, and the Saturday Review, he became editor of the latter paper, a post which he held from 1868 to 1883.

In the medical profession Gloucestershire and Bristol are well represented. Edward Jenner, of Berkeley, one of the benefactors of the human race, heads a long list which includes, among others, Matthew Baillie, Thomas Beddoes (the father of the poet), Richard Bright (the discoverer of Bright's disease), William Budd, whose researches threw much light on zymotic diseases, Thomas Dover (from whom "Dover's Powders" took their name), and Caleb Hillier Parry, of Cirencester, who wrote a valuable treatise on the Arterial Pulse. Sir John Tomes, who was knighted on account of his eminence in dental surgery, was born at Weston-on-Avon and came of a family who had lived for centuries in Gloucestershire.

The men of Science form a creditable group. A head and shoulders above the rest stands James Bradley, Astronomer Royal, the discoverer of the Aberration of Light and the Nutation of the Earth's axis. He was born at Sherborne in Gloucestershire and educated at the Northleach Grammar School. Second to Bradley must be placed Sir Charles Wheatstone, who had a genius for making practical use of scientific discoveries. He was the son of a music seller in Gloucester and was born at Barnwood in 1802. The application of electricity for the transmission of messages (although he can hardly be called its inventor) was more due to him and his fellow-worker, Sir W. F. Cook, than to anyone else. Nathaniel Bliss, who succeeded Bradley as Astronomer Royal, was born in Bisley.

The names of others will be found in this group who have, in a lesser degree, contributed to the advancement of Science. James Cowles Prichard and John Beddoe (both of Bristol) were eminent ethnologists. William John Broderip, son of a Bristol surgeon, was the author of many valuable papers on Zoology and other branches of Natural Science, which appeared in periodicals and Transactions of Scientific Societies. John Leonard Knapp, of Alveston, wrote the "Journal of a Naturalist," which went through four editions. John Canton and John Watkins Brett were electricians. The former, who was born at Stroud, made valuable discoveries relating to the properties of electricity, and the latter, whose father was a cabinet maker in Bristol, was the originator of submarine telegraphy. Jonathan Hulls, who was born at Chipping Campden in 1699, must not be left unmentioned, as he originated and constructed a small tug, which was the first vessel ever propelled by steam.

John Lightfoot, the author of "Flora Scotica," was born at Newent and educated at the Crypt School in Gloucester. David Mushet and his son, Robert Forester Mushet, metallurgists, resided for many years at Coleford, where the latter was born. Their experiments resulted in many improved methods for the manufacture of iron and steel.

William Sanders and G. W. K. Thwaites were both natives of Bristol. The former was a geologist and the latter a botanist and entomologist. John Turton, who was a conchologist, was born at Olveston, near Almondsbury, and Eleanor Ormerod (a writer on entomology), daughter of the historian of Cheshire, was born at Sedbury.

George Gore, the discoverer of amorphous antimony and electrolytic sounds, was born in Bristol. Charles H. Greville Williams, the discoverer of quinoline-blue, and William James Russell, President of the Institute of Chemistry (1894-7), were natives of Cheltenham and Gloucester respectively.

The names of John and Sebastian Cabot (the one of whom was connected by residence, and the other by birth with the City of Bristol), alone give lustre to the part which Bristolians have played as explorers. Captain James, another adventurous and capable navigator, who attempted to discover a north-west passage in 1631, was also closely connected with Bristol. The account which he wrote of his voyage is very interesting and has often been reprinted. James's Bay was named after him. Martin Pring was another Sea Captain who was sent by Bristol merchants on exploring expeditions and earned for himself some distinction. The voyage on which Captain Woodes Rogers was sent from Bristol in 1708 was more of a filibustering than exploring character, but it has a literary interest as it occasioned the discovery of Alexander Selkirk on the island of Juan Fernandez.

Turning to overland explorers, we find that Samuel Turner, who wrote the first published account of a journey to Tibet, was a native of Gloucestershire; Thomas Edward Bowdich, the writer of "A Mission from Cape Coast Castle to Ashantee," was a Bristolian; and Frank Hatton, whose brilliant career as a scientific explorer in Borneo was cut short by an accident at the early age of twenty-two, was born at Horfield.

In the musical world the county and city which are the subject of this work hold a respectable place. The names of many eminent organists who have also been composers may be noticed. In the front rank of these stand Samuel and Samuel Sebastian Wesley, the son and grandson of Charles Wesley, the hymn-writer, the former of whom was born in Bristol, and the latter was organist of Gloucester Cathedral for the last ten years of his life. John Stafford Smith was born in Gloucester, and Edward Hodges and Alfred Stone in Bristol, and all became organists in the Cathedrals of their native cities. William Child, who was organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, was also born in Bristol. William Hine and Barnabas Gunn were organists of Gloucester Cathedral, the former for eighteen, and the latter for eight years. Elway Bevin is said by Anthony Wood to have been organist of Bristol Cathedral from 1589 to 1637. Another local organist and composer was Robert Broderip, who lived in Bristol all his life. John Clarke Whitfield, who was organist of Hereford Cathedral (1822-33), was born in Gloucester. Robert Lucas Pearsall (composer), was born at Clifton, and Henry Phillips (vocalist), and Robert Sidney Pratten (flautist), at Bristol. All of the above have been deemed worthy to be included in the Dictionary of National Biography.

Another very eminent, perhaps the most eminent of all our county musical composers, is Sir Hubert Parry, the owner of Highnam Court, and son of Thomas Gambier Parry the distinguished fresco painter. He has composed two oratorios and many symphonies, songs, sonatas and anthems, and he has been Director of the Royal College of Music since 1894.

The names of eight natives of Gloucestershire or Bristol will be found, who were sufficiently successful on the stage to obtain a place in the Dictionary of National Biography. These are Richard Estcourt, of Tewkesbury ; Mary Robinson, Amy Sedgwick, Charles Bonnor and Thomas German Reed, of Bristol ; Charles Bannister, "of Gloucestershire"; Thomas Chiswell King, of Twyning ; and Edwin Ransford, of Bourton-on-the-Water. Estcourt, Mary Robinson and Bonnor were also dramatists.

But for Bristol the list of artists would indeed be meagre, for the county can lay claim to only two painters of talent — Thomas Gambier Parry and Samuel Edward Waller. Parry purchased Highnam Court, near Gloucester, in 1838, where he lived for fifty years. The walls of the beautiful church at Highnam, which was built from his design, he decorated with frescoes. In the painting of these, in order to ensure their permanence, he used a spirit as a medium—a process of which he was the inventor, and which was approved and adopted by Sir Frederick Leighton. In his appreciation of the beauties of the early Italian Masters, Parry was a generation ahead of his day, and his style was distinctly influenced by studying some of their works. Indeed, the Highnam frescoes call to mind those in the Capella San Giorgio at Padua, by Avanzi and Altichieri—two of the Giotteschi—for whom Parry had a special admiration. He also decorated with frescoes the lantern and the roof of six bays of the nave of Ely Cathedral, the roof of the nave of Tewkesbury Abbey, and the walls and roof of St. Andrew's Chapel in Gloucester Cathedral. All of these works he carried out gratuitously and at considerable expense to himself. It may be added that he took a leading part in County affairs, to which he devoted much time.

Samuel Edward Waller was the son of Frederick Waller, architect, of Gloucester, where his son Samuel was born. His genre pictures were very popular and commanded high prices. Many of them have been acquired by Colonial and Provincial Galleries, and some have been engraved.

Bristol, on the other hand, can boast a fair number of artists connected with her by birth and residence. Chief among these is the great portrait painter Sir Thomas Lawrence, who was born at No. 6, Redcross Street, Bristol, on May 4, 1769. He did not, it is true, reside there for long, as his father removed to Devizes when he was only three years old, but he was sent to school in Bristol when quite young. He was an extraordinarily precocious child, and his talent for taking likenesses made its appearance when he was 5 years old. He made a great reputation at a very early age. After the death of Sir Joshua Reynolds, he was appointed painter in ordinary to the King when he was only 23 years old, and in 1819 he was elected President of the Academy. He painted the portraits of a large number of celebrities, among others the Duke of Wellington, Sir Walter Scott, Lord Eldon, Samuel Rogers and Mrs Siddons. The portrait of our Gloucestershire antiquary, Samuel Lysons, which has been so beautifully engraved by S. W. Reynolds, was his handiwork. He died in 1830, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral by the side of Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Bristol has also the honour of having given her name to a School of landscape painters of considerable merit. The "Bristol School" comprised Samuel Jackson, G. A. Fripp, Nicholas Pocock, J. B. Pyne, Edward Bird, William Evans, the Branwhites, W. J. Müller and Samuel Phillips Jackson. Henry Brittan Willis, James Francis Danby and Paul Falconer Poole were all born in Bristol. Brittan Willis gained a considerable reputation as an animal painter; and Danby, a landscape painter, was a frequent exhibitor in the Academy. Poole painted historic and idyllic pictures with considerable power, and twenty-six of his works were exhibited at a winter exhibition in Burlington House after his death.

Only two sculptors and two architects whose names occur later, have found their way into the Dictionary of National Biography. The former are Edward Hodges Baily, a native of Bristol, and John Thomas, who was born at Chalford in 1813; the latter are Edward William Godwin and John Norton, both of whom were born in Bristol.

The families of Berkeley and Somerset have given to the County many good sportsmen, and the packs of fox-hounds which have been kept by them for generations have a national reputation. W. G. Grace, the greatest cricketer, and Fred Archer, the most successful jockey during the last half of the 19th century, were both natives of Gloucestershire. Charles Travess, who was huntsman of the Cotswold hounds from 1872 to 1908, knew all about his business, and was a fine rider to hounds.

The energies of Bristol were undoubtedly great and expressed themselves in divers forms. We have seen that she was a centre of religious thought and that she gave birth to poets and prose writers, to theologians and philanthropists, to artists and explorers, but the fine physique and animal courage of her citizens earned for her fame of a very different character. Biographical references will be found in these pages to sixteen prize-fighters, of whom no less than twelve hailed from Bristol, where they received their early training in what was then called the "Noble Art of Self Defence," and three of the remaining four were born within seven miles of the city. Four (Tom Cribb, Jem Belcher, Ben Brain, and John Gully) became Champions of England. Gully's career was a strange one. Having made some money in the prize-ring he went on the turf and amassed a large fortune as a bookmaker. He became an owner of racehorses, and twice won the Derby and the Two Thousand Guineas. For five years he represented Pontefract in Parliament. He invested his winnings in coal mines, and these seem to have afforded him his chief interest in the later years of his life.

This brief survey of the most prominent men and women whose names occur in this volume gives a tolerably complete answer to the catechetical title of Canon Lysons' tract "What has Gloucestershire achieved?" It should not, however, be forgotten that the work is bibliographical, and consequently does not include the names of some who well deserve to be placed among Gloucestershire Worthies, but about whom it has chanced that nothing has been written.

BEREWE, see BARROW.

BERKELEY, Family of, [of Berkeley Castle, co. Gloucester, which they have owned for more than 700 years. The present owner is descended directly in the male line from Eadnoth, Edward the Confessor's "Staller," to whose great grandson Maurice, Richard I. granted the lordship of Berkeley Hernesse, to be held by him and his heirs in barony. In all probability this charter did but confirm an earlier grant of this lordship to Maurice's father, Robert Fitzhardinge [q.v.], the founder of St. Augustine's Priory in Bristol. If Robert is regarded as the first Baron Berkeley, Frederick Augustus (the 5th earl and last owner of the Berkeley Estate of unquestioned legitimacy) was the 23rd Baron. But Thomas, the 6th Baron on this assumption, who was summoned by writ to attend the Parliament of 1295 has probably a better legal title to be regarded as the first Baron. (See Lords' Reports on Dignity of a Peer, 1816-29, App. i., 67). These two methods of enumeration occasionally give rise to confusion. George, who was 14th Baron after the writ of 1295, was created an earl in 1679.]

WORKS

1666. Historical Applications and Occasional Meditations upon Several Subjects. Written by a Person of Honour. London, Printed by F. Flesher for R. Royston, Bookseller to his most Sacred Majesty. 1666. 12mo. B.M.

Title, Verses by Waller, beginning "Bold is the man that dares ingage," and Dedication "To the Lady Harmonia," signed "Constans," 7 leaves ; A Prayer, pp. 1–6 ; Historical Applications, &c., pp. 7–125.

Waller's Verses, which appear in all later editions, have been supplied in MS. in the B.M. copy, in which leaf A2 is wanting. This edition is excessively rare. It was unknown to Horace Walpole when he wrote his "Noble Authors," where he gives the 1670 edition as the first. The B.M. copy of the first edition subsequently came into his possession, and he noted in it that he had never heard of another.

The novel here reviewed was entitled "Berkeley Castle." The review was by Dr. Wm. Maginn and gave rise to a savage assault on Mr Jas. Fraser, the Proprietor of the Magazine, by Mr Grantley Berkeley (in which he was assisted by his brother Craven), and to a duel between Mr Berkeley and Dr. Maginn.

Vol. 2. Pp. xi. & 358.

These 2 vols. were re-issued with two additional vols. in the next year. The author laboriously attempts (vol. 1, cap. 2) to prove that no private marriage had taken place between his father and mother, and does not scruple to blacken their characters ; indeed, here and in other parts of the volumes he seems to take a delight in bespattering every member of his family with mud. They were reviewed in Macmillan's Magazine, xi., 467–477 ; Temple Bar, xiv., 103–118.

This work has been often confused with a prose work entitled "Love-Letters between a Nobleman and his Sister with the History of their Adventures. In Three Parts," which went through many editions. The 5th (London: Pr. for D. Brown, J. Tonson & others) appeared in 1718 and the 8th in 1765. This latter work is attributed by Halkett & Laing to Aphra Behn, but it is not included in the list of her works given in the Dictionary of National Biography.

Lady Henrietta alleged in Court at the end of the trial that she was married to a Mr Turner, son of Sir Wm. Turner, an Advocate. Her father ordered her to come home with him, but she refused to leave her nominal husband and an affray took place in Westminster Hall in which swords were drawn on both sides.

CABOT, John, [discoverer of Newfoundland; a Venetian Merchant who settled in Bristol, c. 1472, where he is believed to have died in 1498.]

CABOT, Sebastian, [cosmographer; son of John Cabot q.v.; is said to have been born in Bristol in 1474 (See D.N.B.), but whether he was born there or in Venice seems doubtful (see N. & Q., Ser. 2, vol. 5, pp. 1, 154, 193, 263 & 285; Ser. 3, vol. 1, p. 48); he certainly spent part of his life in Bristol. He died in 1557. A portrait of him, erroneously attributed to Holbein, which was once in the possession of Chas. J. Harford, Esq., of Bristol, was sold to an American in 1845, and destroyed by fire at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Three copies of it were made before its destruction. One, by John Chapman, is in the Gallery of the Massachusetts Historical Society, at Boston; one is the property of the New York Historical Society; and one (? by James Herring) was presented by Alderman Francis Fox to the Bristol Corporation in 1897. The original portrait was also engraved by S. Rawle for Seyer's History of Bristol (vol. 2, p. 208), and an engraving of it in vignette by Storm was published in America. CHATTERTON, Thomas, [poet; b. Nov. 20, 1752, in a small house behind Pyle Street Charity School, of which his father was head master; baptised in St. Mary Redcliffe Church on Jan. 1, 1753; educated at Pyle Street School and at Colston's Hospital; his first poem, written when he was 10 years old, was published in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal, Jan. 8, 1763. When 12 years old he commenced writing poems which he alleged had been preserved in Canynges' coffer in St. Mary Redcliffe; some of these which he ascribed to Thomas Rowley, "prieste of St. Johan's Bristowe," he handed to George Catcott and William Barrett, who believed in their authenticity. For a brief interval Horace Walpole was one of his dupes. In 1767 he was apprenticed to John Lambert, a Bristol attorney, for 7 years, but Lambert cancelled his Indentures in 1770, and on April 24 in that year he went to London, where, after vainly struggling for 4 months to earn a livelihood by his pen, he poisoned himself on Aug. 25. His portrait, painted by Morris, was in the possession of Wordsworth, and subsequently of Sir Henry Taylor. Seven other reputed portraits of him are almost certainly spurious. One of these appeared as the frontispiece of the 1837 edition of Dix's Life of Chatterton. It was engraved by Woodman from a copy by N. C. Branwhite of a picture which was in the possession of Mr G. W. Braikenridge and was probably a portrait by Morris of his son F. Morris. See Dict. Nat. Biog., x., 152; N. & Q., Ser. 5, vi., 60. It was suppressed in the second edition of Dix's Chatterton.]

DENNYS, John, [of Pucklechurch, where his father Hugh, his grandfather John, and possibly his great grandfather, Sir Walter, had also lived. His mother was Catherine, daughter of Edward Tryo, of Hardwicke. It has only recently been established that he was the author of "The Secrets of Angling," a poem of considerable merit, the early editions of which are excessively rare. It is stated on the title-page to be by "I. D." Isaac Walton, who quoted 6 beautiful stanzas from it, ascribed it to "Jo. Davors," and it has been assigned to Donne and to six different Davieses (Dict. Nat. Biog., xiv., 375), but an entry in the Register at Stationers' Hall that it was the work of "John Dennys" coupled with an allusion in it to the "sweet Boyd"—a stream which divides Pucklechurch from Dyrham—puts an end to further question as to its authorship. John Dennys died in 1609, and Roger Jackson, the printer of "The Secrets," who wrote the Dedication of the First Edition which appeared in 1613, stated in it that he had received the MS. after its author's death.]

1888. Dict. Nat. Biog., xiv., 375-6.

Biographical allusions to John Dennys will be found in some of the editions of and notes on "The Secrets of Angling," mentioned below.

THE SECRETS OF ANGLING

1613. The Secrets of Angling: Teaching, The Choisest Tooles Baytes and seasons, for the taking of any Fish, in Pond or Riuer: practised and familiarly opened in three Bookes. By I.D. Esquire [Woodcut.] Printed at London, for Roger Iackson, and are to be sould at his shop neere Fleetstreet Conduit, 1613. sm. 8vo. B.

Flyleaf, Title, Dedication by "R.I." (the Printer) to Master John Harborne, of Tackley, Oxfordshire, Sonnet "In due praise of this Praise-worthy Skill and Worke," signed Io. Dauies, & Contents, 4 leaves [A—(A4)]; Text B—(E3) in eights.

"Finis" is printed at the end of the "Secrets of Angling," on E3 front, but on the back of E3 are the 4 lines:—

Wouldst thou catch Fish?
Then here's thy wish;
Take this receipt
To annoynt thy Baite followed by the receipt (8 lines in verse) signed "Probatum;" after which come 4 more lines, signed B.R., with another "Finis" at foot of the page.

The woodcut on the title-page represents two men fishing. There is a fish on the hook of the one on the left, and over it a scroll with the inscription:—

Well fayre the plesure that brings such treasure.

The one on the right has a globe at the end of his line, and above it a label with the words

Hold hooke and line
then all is mine.

This is said to be the earliest English poem on fishing that was printed. Only three perfect copies of this edition are known to exist, one of which is in the Bodleian, one in the Denison library, and the other was in the Huth library. A second edition appeared, it is conjectured, in or about 1620, but, as far as is known, the only copy in existence is in the Denison library, and this has had the date ploughed off by the binder.

——— [Another Edition, ? the third,] Augmented with many approved experiments. By W: L. [Woodcut as in 1st ed.] Printed at London for . . . sm. 8vo. [1630.] B.M.

Title, "In due Praise," &c., signed Io. Daves; Ded. to Mr Harborne; To the Reader, signed W Lanson, and Contents, 3 leaves; Text, 30 leaves (A5—E2); Additions, 2 leaves.

This copy has been mutilated by the binder. The printer's name and the date are gone, and it has been badly cut all round. In its present state it measures 5½ by 3 in. It is dated in the B.M. Cat. 1630, a date probably taken from a more perfect copy said to be in the Denison library. No other copies of this edition are known to exist.

HALE, Sir Matthew, [Lord Chief Justice, son of Robert Hale, of Alderley, Glos., where he was born in 1609, and where he died and was buried, in 1676. He was M.P. for Gloucestershire, 1654 and 1660-1. His biographer, Bp. Burnet, says "That he was one of the greatest patterns this age has afforded, whether in his private deportment as a Christian, or in his public employments, either at the bar or on the bench," an estimate which still meets with general acceptance. There are portraits of him in the Guildhall, London, in the National Portrait Gallery, in Lincoln's Inn Library, in the Bodleian Library, and at Alderley House. The Guildhall and Lincoln's Inn portraits are by Michael Wright. They have been engraved by G. Vertue, C. Picart, T. Trotter, F. H. Van Hove, R. White, and in mezzotint by an unknown engraver. The two last are especially fine. The Alderley House portrait is a copy or a replica of that in the Guildhall. It has been engraved by H. Adlard. An engraved portrait of Hale (sitting) by F. H. Van Hove which forms the frontispiece of his Primitive Origination of Mankind (1677) is not after any of the painted portraits which have been named. Burnet's 'Life' of Hale went through more than 20 editions. These are mentioned under the first edition (1682) without cross references under their respective dates.]

In the course of his summing up, Sir Matthew Hale said: "that there were such creatures as witches he had no doubt at all; for first the Scriptures had affirmed so much; secondly, the wisdom of all nations provided laws against such persons." In consequence of this expression of opinion by so great an authority trials for witch-craft greatly increased in number. The two poor women tried before Hale were convicted and hanged.

HOOPER, John, [Bishop of Gloucester. He was nominated to the See July 3, 1550, but refused it as he objected to the form of the oath of supremacy and to the episcopal vestments. He subsequently overcame his scruples and was consecrated Mar. 8, 1551. In 1552 he was made also Bp. of Worcester, and later he was so styled, Gloucester having been made an Archdeaconry. On the accession of Queen Mary he was charged with heresy, condemned and burned in Gloucester on Feb. 9, 155$\frac{4}{5}$.]

Fourteen leaves A-[B6]. Black letter. "The wordes of Maister Houper at his death" are on the last 4 pages. They consist of a prayer and 20 lines in verse. The heading of the verses (printed p. xxx. in the Parker Society's edition of Hooper's "Later Writings") is as follows :—

"These are the wordes that Maister John Houper wrote on the wall with a cole, in the newe Inne in Gloceter, the night before he suffered."

From internal evidence it seems improbable that these "wordes" are authentic. However, Hooper spent the two nights before his execution in the house of Robert Ingram, and a "Robertus Ingram" is described as an "Innholder" in the Burgess Roll of Gloucester for the years 1534-5 to 1563-4.

[Another edition, entitled] The Wordes of Maister Hooper at his death. 12 mo. B.

Pp. 3. Printed at the end of "A Ballet Declaring the fal of the whore of babylone intytuled Tye thy mare tom boye w̃ other and there unto a prologe to the reders. Black letter.

The copy collated is imperfect, wanting the last 18 lines of verse. It has the appearance of having been printed about the same time as "The Complaynte of Ueritie."

On the last page but one, "Imprynted at London, by John Tisdale and Thomas Hacket and are to be solde at their shoppes in Lombarde strete. Anno 1562." The Apology ends on L1 back. It is followed by "The copy of the letter wherby Maister Hooper was certifyed of the takyng of a Godlye Companye in bowe churcheyarde at prayer [L2-L7].

Seven later editions of this work appeared between 1570 and 1641. Its accuracy was vehemently attacked by the Catholics generally and by a few Protestants, and some of their criticisms were undoubtedly well grounded. No well edited edition has appeared. The best known of the later editions is that of 1843-9, q.v.

JAMES, Thomas, [navigator; kinsman of Thomas James, Mayor of Bristol, 1605, 1616; b. ? 1593; in 1628 he was owner and captain of "The Dragon of Bristol"; appointed by the merchants of Bristol commander of an expedition "for the discovery of the north-west passage into the South Sea"; sailed from Bristol May 3, 1631; returned to Bristol Oct. 22, 1632, after a tempestuous voyage, but with the loss of only 4 men; d. ? 1635. He wrote an account of his expedition entitled "The Strange and Dangerous Voyage of Captain Thomas James." Attempts have been made to show that this is the narrative of Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner." Coleridge may have been inspired to write his "Rime" by James' spirited account of his adventures, but there is little similarity between the incidents of the two stories. There is a portrait of him on the "Platt of Sayling" in the 1633 ed. of his "Strange and Dangerous Voyage" (reproduced in the Hakluyt Society's Reprint, 1894) and in Seyer's "Memoirs of Bristol," vol. 2, p. 496.]
